

SIMON HUMPHREYS

Simon Humphreys - Biography

Simon is newly appointed to BCS to implement a Computing Teacher's Association and is also the co-ordinator of the Computing at School working group. Simon taught music for many years before a hearing impairment forced a change in direction and he went back to university. Having graduated with a first-class degree he started to teach A Level Computing at Hills Road Sixth Form College in Cambridge where he became concerned that many students were being put off computing as a subject and the disconnect between the different key stages in school and university.

The Computing at School Working Group is a direct response to this concern; for many students the subject seems dull and pedestrian. The goal is to put the fun back into computing at school!
